Refer to the scenario below to answer the following questions.

Herb Marks built his enterprise on the faithful patronage of four specialty shops and a large contract from Elmore Distributors. But after two years, the maker of novelty pens and pencils had to rethink his strategy when his two-year contract with Elmore ended.

Herb built a company reputation on the manufacture and distribution of a variety of wooden writing utensils with customized engravings. Specialty shops loved to display the products in their fancy, lighted showcases, but such specialty shops alone were not profitable. Herb Marks established a brand name, known merely as Marks, and decided to expand on it.

Herb extended his writing utensil lines to include quills, felt-tip pens, and multiple-cartridge pens that write in different colors. He even added a line of various grades of personalized stationery and business cards. Perhaps Herb's biggest added touch, however, was the addition of two salespeople who would work to explain the diverse array of products offered by Marks, as well as nurture existing accounts.

"We make an excellent product," Herb Marks stated, "and we honor a good guarantee on everything we sell. But let's face it—we face hundreds of competitors! We need Marks representatives out there to help prospects understand what they should demand in something as simple as a writing tool."

The Marks brand was fast-becoming synonymous with top-notch customer service. Part of the purchase package brought personal visits from the Marks representative, before the purchase and long after.

Answer: The two broad classes are consumer products and industrial products. Consumer products and services ♦ those bought by final consumers ♦ are usually classified according to consumer shopping habits. Consumer products include convenience products, shopping products, specialty products, and unsought products. Industrial products are distinguished from consumer products by the purpose for which they were purchased. Industrial products are those that are purchased for further processing or for use in conducting a business. These products include the three broad categories of materials and parts, capital items, and supplies and services.

Answer: Decisions to be made in the development and marketing of individual products and services include 1) product attributes, 2) branding, 3) packaging, 4) labeling, and 5) product support services. Product attribute decisions involve product quality, features, and style and design. Branding decisions include selecting a brand name and developing a brand strategy. Packaging involves designing and producing a product's container; packaging provides many key benefits, such as protection, economy, convenience, and promotion. Labeling identifies the product and may describe and promote the product and brand. Companies must also make a decision about product support services, which are usually a minor or major part of a market offering.

129) Explain the history of legal concerns about packaging and labels.

Answer: The Federal Trade Commission Act of 1914 held that false, misleading, or deceptive labels or packages constitute unfair competition. Labels can mislead consumers, fail to describe important ingredients, or fail to include needed safety warnings. To address this problem, several federal and state laws regulate labeling. The Fair Packaging and Labeling Act of 1966, for example, set mandatory labeling requirements, encouraged voluntary industry packaging standards, and allowed federal agencies to set packaging regulations in specific industries. The Nutritional Labeling and Education Act of 1990 requires sellers to provide detailed nutritional information on food products; the Food and Drug Administration regulates the use of health-related terms such as low-fat, light, and high-fiber.

Answer: The company can introduce line extensions, brand extensions, multibrands, or entirely new brands. A line extension involves extending a current brand name to new forms, colors, sizes, flavors, etc. in one of the company's existing product categories. In contrast, a brand extension extends a current brand name to a new or modified product in a new product category. Multibranding involves introducing several brands within the same category. Finally a company may decide that a new brand name is needed, particularly if the power of an existing brand name is declining or the company is entering a new product category.

Answer: The four service characteristics are intangibility, inseparability, variability, and perishability. Services are intangible: they cannot be seen, tasted, felt, heard, or smelled before they are bought. Services are inseparable: they are produced and consumed at the same time and cannot be separated from their providers, whether the providers are people or machines. Services are variable: their quality may vary greatly, depending on who provides them and when, where, and how they are provided. Services are perishable: they cannot be stored for later sale or use.

Answer: The service-profit chain links service firm profits with employee and customer satisfaction. The links in the service-profit chain are as follows: internal service quality leads to satisfied and productive employees, who create greater service value, which leads to satisfied and loyal customers, who create healthy service profits and growth. Internal marketing by a service firm refers to training and effectively motivating its customer-contact employees and all the supporting service people to work as a team to provide customer satisfaction. The service-profit chain deals with employees and customers. Internal marketing deals with training employees.
