Refer to the scenario below to answer the following questions.

Miller Meat Company contracts with several Midwestern farmers to raise beef and pork for its meat processing center. To guarantee freshness, Miller Meat Company relies on a vast distribution network. For delivery to local grocers in Indiana, Miller Meat uses its own fleet of refrigerated trucks; delivery to these Indiana grocers constitutes 65 percent of Miller Meat's business. For deliveries in Illinois, Wisconsin, and points directly west of the Mississippi River, Miller Meat Company contracts with a refrigerated fleet that specializes in expediting smaller shipments. For faster delivery during peak times, Miller Meat Company often uses its own trucks to deliver to the expedited fleet's consolidation point from its distribution warehouse in Indiana. During the holiday season, however, several specialty distributors contract with Miller Meat Company to package specialty meats in gift boxes, then ship them directly to the recipients. For these specialty shipments within Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, Miller uses its normal delivery mode. For all other specialty shipments, Miller ships from its distribution warehouse via air, then contracts with expedited carriers in various cities to deliver to the recipients.

99) Which of the following is one of Miller Meat Company's upstream partners?

- A) local grocers in Indiana who sell the company's products
- B) Midwestern farmers who raise beef and pork for the meat processing center
- C) the refrigerated fleet that expedites small shipments
- D) air carriers that take Miller's specialty shipments

126) Explain why "value delivery network" is a more relevant expression to use than the terms supply chain and demand chain.

Answer: Supply chain takes a make-and-sell view of the business, using materials and other inputs as the starting point for market planning instead of the needs of target customers. Demand chain takes a sense-and-respond view, starting with the needs of target customers and planning a chain of resources and activities with the goal of creating customer value. However, a demand chain is a step-by-step, linear view of purchase-production-consumption activities. This does not allow for the flexibility made possible by the Internet and other technologies. Value delivery network is more appropriate because it is made up of the company, suppliers, distributors, and ultimately customers who partner with each other to improve the performance of the entire system.

127) How do channel members add value to a marketing system?

Answer: Intermediaries reduce the amount of work that must be done by both producers and consumers. They transform the assortment of products made by producers into the assortment wanted by consumers. They buy large quantities from many producers and break them down into the smaller quantities and broader assortments wanted by consumers. Intermediaries help to match supply and demand. Channel members add value by bridging the major time, place, and possession gaps that separate goods and services from those who would use them.

128) What are the eight key functions that members of the marketing channel perform?

Answer: Some help to complete transactions by gathering and distributing information, developing and spreading promotions, contacting prospective buyers, matching and shaping the offer to the buyer's needs, and negotiating price and other terms. Others help to fulfill the completed transactions through physical distribution, financing, and risk taking.

129) Compare and contrast a conventional distribution channel with a vertical marketing system (VMS).

Answer: A conventional distribution channel consists of one or more independent producers, wholesalers, and retailers. Each is a separate business seeking to maximize its own profits, even at the expense of the system as a whole. No channel member has much control over the other members, and no formal means exists for assigning roles and resolving channel conflict. On the other hand, a vertical marketing system is a unified system made up of producers, wholesalers, and retailers. While members of a conventional distribution channel seek to maximize their own profits, members of a vertical marketing system all cooperate because either one member owns the others, one has contracts with the others, or one wields a more power than the others.

130) Why are multichannel distribution systems gaining popularity today?

Answer: Multichannel distribution systems exist when a single firm sets up two or more marketing channels to reach one or more customer segments. Such a system offers advantages to firms facing large and complex markets. It allows the firms to expand sales and market coverage. It allows firms to tailor their products and services to the specific needs of diverse customer segments. Larger bottom-line profits may occur.

131) How have changes in technology and the growth of online marketing affected the design of marketing channels?

Answer: Changes in technology and the growth of online marketing have increased disintermediation, which is the cutting out of marketing channel intermediaries by product or service producers, or the displacement of traditional intermediaries with radically new types. In many industries, traditional intermediaries are dropping by the wayside. For example, many airlines now sell directly to final buyers, cutting retailers and sales agents from their marketing channels. Online marketers take business from traditional brick-and-mortar retailers.

132) Distinguish between the three distribution strategies.

Answer: Producers of convenience products and common raw materials typically seek intensive distribution as a strategy to stock their products in as many outlets as possible. The goods are available where and when consumers want them, such as chewing gum. Selective distribution is used when selling to more than one but fewer than all of the intermediaries who are willing to carry a company's products in a given market. Examples are name-brand blue jeans and computers. Exclusive distribution is used when the producer wants to stock its products with only one or a few dealers in an area. Examples are expensive cars and prestige clothing.

133) Explain how companies select, motivate, and evaluate channel members.

Answer: When selecting intermediaries, the company should evaluate each channel member's qualifications and select those who best fit its channel objectives. The company should use economic criteria, control issues, and adaptive criteria to analyze each possible channel member. Once selected, channel members must be continuously motivated to do their best. The company must sell not only through the intermediaries but also to and with them. It should work to forge long-term partnerships with channel partners to create a marketing system that meets the needs of both the manufacturer and the partners. The company must also regularly check channel member performance against established performance standards, rewarding intermediaries who are performing well and assisting or replacing weaker ones.

134) Discuss how public policy affects distribution decisions.

Answer: For the most part, companies are legally free to develop whatever channel arrangement suits them, as long as they do not substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly, and as long as both parties enter into the agreement voluntarily. Exclusive territorial agreements in which a producer attempts to keep a dealer from selling outside of a designated territory have become a major legal issue. Producers are free to select their dealers, but they must have legitimate cause to terminate a relationship with a dealer.

135) Why are more and more companies turning to third-party logistics providers (3PLs)?

Answer: A third-party logistics provider is an independent company that performs any or all of the functions required to get a producer's product to market, helping clients to tighten up sluggish, overstuffed supply chains, slash inventories, and get products to customers more quickly and reliably. Companies use third-party logistics providers because getting the product to market is the main focus of 3PLs, so they can often do it more efficiently and at a lower cost. Second, outsourcing logistics frees a company to focus more intensely on its core business. Finally, integrated logistics companies understand increasingly complex logistics environments. For example, third-party logistics partners can be especially helpful to companies attempting to expand their global market coverage.
